Freelance Website Copywriter – Remote Kindle Publishing Role – No Degree or Experience Required

Description

Position Summary:

If you've been searching for freelance website copywriter roles, you may be expecting to write high-converting landing pages, SEO homepages, or brand messaging for clients. But most of those positions require agency experience, a polished portfolio, or years in digital marketing. This opportunity is different.

Our client, a digital-first nonfiction publishing company, is hiring beginner-level publishing assistants for remote Kindle book production. While this isn't traditional website copywriting, the role incorporates many of the same key skills—writing clear, structured descriptions, formatting persuasive headlines, and optimizing digital content for an online marketplace. You'll follow a repeatable system that uses AI tools and tested templates to assemble and publish nonfiction books on Amazon Kindle. No creative writing. No pitching. No previous copywriting experience needed.

It's a new way to apply copy-focused skills in the world of digital publishing—while earning from home on your schedule.

What You'll Be Doing

Each project begins with a nonfiction book topic already selected based on Amazon keyword demand. You'll receive:

- A chapter-by-chapter book outline
- A keyword guide and topic brief
- AI content assistant access
- Kindle manuscript formatting templates
- Copywriting swipe files for product listings
- A full publishing checklist to follow

Your first task is to generate and refine the content. Using structured prompts, you'll instruct the AI assistant to build out each chapter. You'll then review and polish that content for clarity, flow, and tone. You're not writing from scratch—you're shaping pre-generated material into a polished digital product.

Once the book content is complete, you'll format it using a Kindle-compliant manuscript template. That means structuring the front matter (title page, TOC), organizing chapters, and applying layout rules to ensure the book displays correctly on mobile and eReaders.

Just inserting the right language into proven frameworks that convert browsers into buyers.

Finally, you'll upload everything to Amazon Kindle Direct Publishing (KDP), complete a publishing checklist, and log your project for payout.

How This Relates to Copywriting

While you won't be writing traditional web pages, this role teaches and uses essential copywriting fundamentals:

- Benefit-led headlines (book titles and subtitles)
- SEO-driven metadata (keywords and categories)
- Persuasive product descriptions (sales copy structure)
- Content clarity and readability (manuscript editing)
- CTA integration (calls-to-action inside the book and listing)

If you're looking to break into copywriting or content optimization, this is an ideal entry point with hands-on, monetized learning built in.

What a Workweek Could Look Like

Monday: You receive a new assignment—"Time Management for Remote Professionals." You use the AI content builder to generate chapters and begin reviewing the first draft.

Tuesday: You refine the manuscript and paste it into the Kindle template, ensuring spacing, TOC links, and formatting are correct.

Wednesday: You use swipe files to build the product listing—creating a compelling subtitle, Amazon description, and keyword entry. You then upload the book to KDP.

Thursday: The book is published. You log the project as complete, your payment is confirmed, and you're free to start your next assignment.

You control the pace. Whether you publish one book per month or several per week is entirely up to you.
