Publishing Assistant (Remote) – No Degree or Writing Experience Required

Description

Position Overview

We're inviting motivated individuals to participate in a remote publishing assistant opportunity designed to generate passive income through the Kindle Direct Publishing platform. This is not an employee role or freelance gig—there are no deadlines, managers, or hourly wages. Instead, you'll use a step-by-step system to help create and publish nonfiction books and earn royalties for each sale.

This opportunity is ideal for individuals who want location freedom, flexible scheduling, and ownership over their income. You'll be assisting in the production and launch of short, information-driven Kindle books using a beginner-friendly process that doesn't require writing or design skills. Everything you need—from tools to templates—is included.

What You'll Do

As a publishing assistant, your role will be to manage the workflow that turns raw nonfiction topics into published Kindle books. You'll focus on research, organizing content, using templates, and publishing finished books using Amazon's Kindle Direct Publishing (KDP) system.

Once published, each book becomes a digital product that generates income 24/7. You'll earn royalties on every sale, and your income can grow as you publish more titles.

Key Activities

Research and Topic Selection

You'll use provided research tools to identify book topics with strong demand and low competition. The system shows you how to analyze Amazon search data and bestselling lists to select profitable nonfiction niches.

Content Structuring and Assembly

Instead of writing full books, you'll use pre-built outlines, AI suggestions, and optional freelancers to compile book manuscripts. You'll follow proven nonfiction formats that readers love: problem/solution, how-to guides, and step-by-step
